OPERATIONS

In the latter part of 1946 five air units, comprising over seven hundred officers and men, were allotted to the Louisiana Air National Guard for the purpose of defending the critically important New Orleans area. As a vital link in its "M" Day defensive setup, the Air Force allotted to the 122nd Bombardment Squadron (Light) the 122nd Weather Station, the 122nd Utility Flight, the 211th Air Service Group (Detachment C), and Headquarters of the 135th Radar Control and Warning Squadron (Large Scale). New Orleans was chosen as the site for all units except the two supporting radar organizations of the 135th which were to be activated in Houma and Baton Rouge.
