OPERATIONS

The maintenance people who are responsible for keeping the Washington Air National Guard aircraft in good flying condition are assigned to the 141st Consolidated Aircraft Maintenance Squadron. Many varied career fields are required within this complex maintenance organization. The spectrum runs from the administrative personnel who perform the needed tasks of record keeping and pay information to the experienced aircraft mechanics who actually repair the aircraft. Modern day aircraft are composed of complex systems which require the specialized skills of personnel especially trained to keep these systems operating properly. Maintenance jargon calls them "specialists" CAMS maintenance personnel are a highly dedicated group of people who know their job, do their job and are proud of the job they do.
