EMBLEM

Blue and yellow are the Air Force colors. Blue alludes to the sky, the primary theater of Air Force operations. Yellow refers to the sun and the excellence required of Air Force personnel. The lightning bolt represents communications intelligence and communications maintenance, the areas of training provided by the unit. The osprey symbolizes the Air Force mission and also suggests the squadron's relationship to the Navy. The arc of crosses reflects the unit's association and lineage with its parent unit, the 17th Training Wing. (Approved, 10 Jun 1997, modified, 28 Mar 2007)

NICKNAME*OPERATIONS

In mid-1961, Detachment One, 6940th Technical Training Group was established with three instructors. During the next 15 years there was little growth in the unit – it never had more than 10 instructors and 20 students. A major step in the unit's development came on 29 July 1975 when the Air Force Security Service (now the Air Intelligence Agency), established the 6945th School Squadron. Growth came almost immediately as the unit quickly attained a permanent staff of 46 and a student load of 150 annually. The squadron remained attached to the Air Force Security Service until July 1, 1978, when Security Service turned over control of the unit to Air Training Command (now Air Education and Training Command) and it became the 3482nd School Squadron. Since that time the squadron's parent unit has been the 17th Training Wing, located at Goodfellow AFB, San Angelo, Texas.

For its contributions to Corry Station, the squadron was awarded the Navy Meritorious Unit Citation in 1979; and again in 1995 and 1997. In 1980, the unit was recognized for its work in Project Red, White, and Blue, the relocation of Cuban refugees. In 1993, President Clinton awarded Corry Station with the Volunteer Action Award for tutoring local elementary school children who were at risk of failing.

From its growth and transfer to Air Education and Training Command, the 313th Training Squadron has established a rich tradition of outstanding achievement and quality training. More than 5,000 Air Force personnel have successfully completed training and gone on to fill positions of leadership and responsibility around the world and throughout the Air Force.
