OPERATIONS

In 2005, AFMC formed the Training Aircraft Systems Group as part of the AFMC Transformation initiative, which replaced traditional project offices with wings, groups, and squadrons. In 2006 most of these new organizations were consolidated with World War II units and given the numbers of the older units. As a result of this, the group became the 337th Aeronautical Systems Group. In 2007, the group's Foreign Military Sales (FMS) team oversaw the effort to provide the Iraqi Air Force with Cessna 172 training aircraft to resume operations and also sought vendors for Counterinsurgency aircraft for Iraq. The group was inactivated in 2008 and its subordinate units were transferred to the 877th Aeronautical Systems Group.
