

98th SOUTHERN RANGES SUPPORT SQUADRON

MISSION

The 98th SRSS provides management oversight for Creech AFB and NTTR Southern Ranges and coordinates Air Force and contractor support for three organizations: 11th Reconnaissance Squadron, 15th Reconnaissance Squadron and the 99th Ground Combat Training Flight. It also provides support to deployed forces, authorizes airfield access, oversees NTTR Southern Range operational activities (1.1 million acres) and controls range access; and provides initial response on-scene command for security, fire protection, environmental incidents and medical responses.

Creech AFB and Southern Ranges provide capabilities for emergency divert landings and serves as a forward-operation location, hosting squadron-sized deployments, supporting Silver Flag Alpha and various other flag exercises, training and testing and ground-defense exercises for flying units and all American armed forces. Creech AFB is also used as a practice field for the U.S. Air Force Thunderbirds.
